

School was a memorable journey for me as being a part of it for 15 years helped me develop my overall personality, especially as a footballer who played at the national level for U-17 and U-19.

Being a Physical Education student helped me understand sports better, from fitness to game strategies, and also taught me valuable lessons about discipline and perseverance. The teaching faculty in junior college played a significant role in shaping me, providing guidance and support that contributed to my overall growth and development as an individual.

Apart from academics and sports, school gave me a great environment for learning, friendships, and personal growth. Eventually, I chose to pursue law, combining my passion for learning with the desire to make a difference.

My school and junior college years were honestly a perfect mix of learning and living.

Beyond books and exams, there were celebrations, cultural events, sports day, assemblies, and that daily thought of the day that quietly stuck with us.

Zero period mornings meant rushing to finish homework, while by 1 or 1:30 we'd be exhausted, counting minutes to go home—moments I oddly miss now.

The teachers were encouraging and approachable, always saying this kind of care wouldn't last forever, which only makes sense once you're out.

Looking back, it wasn't just about grades, but about everyday moments that made the journey memorable.

Hello, my name is Indira Patole, and I am an alumna of Hutchings High School and Junior College. I came to this college, just like any other student during a time in my life where you feel there are opportunities for personal and professional growth, but we are still unsure of our own abilities and future. This college helped in instilling and nurtured that first sense of confidence and boundaries to set as everyone has their unique way of perceiving, coping and moving forward. Through the encouragement of instructors and access to academic and different clubs, I found stability and direction. Junior colleges are places of hope. They give students the time, resources, and understanding needed to succeed. I am grateful for the role this institution has played in my life and for the opportunities it continues to provide.
